Types of Bullying

- Physical- hitting, shoving, pushing and destroying property.
 - Verbal - teasing, name calling, threats,
 - Relational - gossiping, embarrassing, leaving someone out

Introduce the various types of Bullying

- o Physical bullying
- o Verbal bullying
- o Social
- o Psychological bullying
- o Cyber bullying

Types of Bullying

- Physical bullying
 - Verbal bullying
 - Social
 - Psychological bullying
 - Cyber bullying

www.lrhartley.com/schoolbully

1. Physical bullying:

This is when a person (or group of people) uses physical actions to bully, such as hitting, poking, tripping or pushing. Repeatedly and intentionally damaging someone's belongings is also physical bullying.

2. Verbal bullying:

Repeated or systematic name calling, insults, homophobic or racist remarks and verbal abuse.

This is the most common form of bullying.

3. Social (covert) bullying:

Indirect actions, such as lying about someone, spreading rumours, playing a nasty joke that make the person feel humiliated or powerless, mimicking or deliberately excluding someone.

4. Psychological bullying:

For example, threatening, manipulating or stalking someone.

5. Cyber bullying:

This is a method of bullying using technology, such as email, mobile phones, chat rooms and social networking sites to bully verbally, socially or psychologically.

What is the School's Approach to Bullying

Sample Parent Handbook:

- At [] we acknowledge that children are growing up in an era in which they are exposed to a new range of social pressures, choices and technology which did not exist in other times.
- At [] we shall provide a seven-year program, from Prep to Year six which is designed to equip our young people to confront social, moral and digital issues in the light of Gospel teachings.

What is the School's Approach to Bullying

[] Parent Handbook:

- The role of the school is to provide an atmosphere which encourages respect for others and fosters healthy attitudes towards self-esteem.
- Our policy and practice, therefore, is based on explicit teaching of expected behaviours, encouragement, affirmation and acceptance of the individual – to enable our students to develop the capacity to take informed responsibility in their own lives.

What Can We Do About It?

Parents need to take strong and immediate action to prevent bullying behaviour getting out of hand. If you find your child has been involved in some type of bullying, here are four important things you can do:

- 1. Manage your reactions
- 2. Get the facts
- 3. Talk with your child
- 4. Work to resolve the situation

What can the Victim do?

- These can be tried if the child feels safe:
- 1. ignore them
- 2. tell them to stop and then walk away
- 3. pretend you don't care, try to act unaffected or unimpressed
- 4. try to deflect the bullying (e.g. pretending to agree in an offhand way 'okay, yeah, maybe')

The Victim
The Bystander

We will look at each of these in turn...

www.lrhartley.com/schoolbully

Read from screen

The Person Who is Bullying

- Displays little empathy for victims
- Enjoys the role
- Lacks a sense of remorse
- Seeks control and domination
- Seeks attention from peers
- Is a good communicator who is quick witted, offers fast verbal responses, and is able to talk his way out of trouble
- Has a significant role model who models aggressive or violent behavior
- Often strong, tough, powerful, well coordinated, dominant, confident

Ring Leader
Associates
Reinforcers

www.lrhartley.com/schoolbully

The Person Who is Bullying.

Ring Leader:

Children who through their social power can direct bullying activity

OR Associates:

Children who actively join in the bullying (sometimes because they are afraid of the ring-leader)

OR Reinforcers:

Children who give positive feedback to the child doing the bullying, for example through comments, by smiling or laughing

The Victim (passive)

- Does not invite attack; is sensitive
- Is emotional, cry easily
- Generally lacks social skills
- Feels isolated at school/ lonely/ depressed
- May have learning problems
- Is unable to defend himself/herself
- Is likely to be anxious and insecure

www.lrhartley.com/schoolbully

Read and elaborate from screen

Victim (provocative)

- Has few friends
- Repeatedly pesters and irritates others
- Is quick tempered and easily provoked
- Will fight back
- May provoke attacks
- May experience learning and attention problems
- May look as if he/she is a bully because they tend to maintain conflict

Bystander or Defender

- Is afraid of associating with the victim for fear the person bullying will turn on them
- Wants to help but doesn't know what to do
- Feels guilty for not acting
- Fears reporting will make him a tattler
- Doesn't like what s/he sees, but feels powerless
- Feels unsafe and unable to take action
- Feels a loss of control

Outsiders/Bystanders:

Children who remain silent or watch and therefore appear to condone the bullying behaviour or who want to keep themselves safe by not drawing attention to themselves out of fear of the bully

OR Defenders:

Children who try to intervene to stop the bullying or comfort the children who experience bullying

Did You Know?

- By 6 weeks into the school year the bully victim patterns have been established.
- Physical bullying increases through the primary years and peaks in upper Primary or High School.
- Children do not tell on bullies because they are afraid it will get worse. They feel no one can help them if they do.

Why Make Changes?

- An estimated 160,000 students miss school each day because of fear of bullying.
- 40% of students are bullies or victims.
- Long term victims may develop mental and health issues.
- Bullying is an entry level to violence.
- 60% of bullies have criminal convictions by age 24.
- School shootings have been linked with bullying problems.

How do I know if my child is being bullied?

- not wanting to go to school
- finding excuses for not going to school
- wanting to go to school a different way
- being very tense, tearful and unhappy
- talking about hating school or other children
- having bruises or scratches

(Cont...)

www.lrhartley.com/schoolbully

Research suggests that very few children tell anyone about being bullied. They may not tell anyone because they feel weak or ashamed, are frightened they may only make things worse, or think there is nothing that can be done.

The first that some parents hear about their child being bullied is when the school contacts them about the issue.

Sometimes children put up with bullying for a long time and only tell their parents when it has become overwhelming.

Some signs your child is being bullied may be:

- not wanting to go to school
- finding excuses for not going to school, e.g. feeling sick or being sick
- wanting to go to school a different way, e.g. changing the route, or being driven instead of catching a bus
- being very tense, tearful and

- unhappy before or after school
- talking about hating school or other children
 - having bruises or scratches ...

How do I know if my child is being bullied?

- damage to or loss of personal belongings
 - showing problems with sleeping
 - not having any friends
 - refusing to talk about what happens at school
 - being upset or secretive

www.lrhartley.com/schoolbully

- damage to or loss of personal belongings
- showing problems with sleeping, e.g. not sleeping, nightmares, bedwetting

- not having any friends
- refusing to talk about what happens at school
- being upset or secretive when receiving text messages, checking emails or social networking sites.

If you suspect your child is being bullied, find an uninterrupted time to ask your child about school and directly ask about bullying or about other children being mean to them.

Realise it may be difficult for your child to tell you the details.

If your child remains reluctant to talk to you, it may be a good idea to discuss your concerns with the class teacher or principal.

Of course, sometimes children do tell their parents they are being bullied.

Parents' careful questions, listening and supportive responses are a very important part of successfully dealing with bullying. Try to keep communication calm and open or you might deter your child from talking to you.

How to Talk to Kids About Bullying

- Your child's attitude
 - Your child's skills
 - Role Play
 - Your child's supports and networks
 - Practice
 - Courage
 - Be flexible
 - Celebrate:

www.lrhartley.com/schoolbully

1. Your child's attitude

It is essential for you to remain positive and focused on trying to find a solution. This positive approach needs to be passed on to the child. A confident, positive and resilient appearance can stop a bully from continuing. Some children may be feeling disempowered and helpless about the situation, so you might need to talk about how to ‘fake it, until you make it’ – how to pretend to be confident until your child actually does feel confident and positive.

Assure your child that it is NOT their fault. Some children might benefit from discussing why the other child bullies them. You could ask your child to think about:

- why some children bully others (why the particular child bullies); explore ideas that the bullying child might only know that way of dealing with others, or that bullies may feel bad about something they cannot do.

- why the other child chose your child to bully; explore ideas that the bullying child might be jealous of them (e.g. for being attractive, intelligent, sporty) or may not understand how they are different from them (e.g. for a disability, being gifted, a cultural difference).

The aim of this type of conversation is not to excuse the bullying behaviour, which must be stopped, but to reduce the likelihood of your child blaming themselves for the bullying. You can acknowledge that it feels bad to be bullied, but point out it doesn't mean your child is powerless.

2. Your child's skills

Before learning new skills, your child needs to think about what they currently do when the bullying happens, and what they could do differently.

Ask your child to think about what the other student gets out of bullying other people, and then ask how your child reacts when being bullied.

When your child starts to see that some children bully just to get a reaction, they can begin to understand how changing the way they react could be part of the solution.

This might mean pretending not to be bothered or frightened by the teasing or threats.

Talk to your child about the idea of taking back their personal ‘power’ through learning new ways of relating to the other child. Most children understand the idea of martial arts as blocking physical attacks.

You can extend this idea to explore ‘talking martial arts’ – stopping the bullying by using your words or actions to ‘block’ verbal or social attacks (Field, 2007).

This might involve:

- pretending not to be bothered or frightened by teasing or threats
- making a quick retort to surprise or disarm the other child
- giving any response rather than looking ‘frozen in fear’
- using a humorous response
- using an image in their mind of blocking the negative comments from hurting them.

Role Play:

Although it might feel a bit strange, practising in role play is very useful to give your child the confidence to confront what may be a scary situation, and to change their usual way of behaving.

Try role plays where your child practises how:

- to stand and walk in a way that appears more confident
- to give a quick retort to disarm the other child
- to use a routine response (e.g. okay, whatever) that implies that the child is not bothered.

 - Be flexible
 - Celebrate:

www.lrhartley.com/schoolbully

Your child's supports and networks

Options to explore to build your child's supports and friendship networks are:

- identifying strengths and things your child is good at; find ways to develop these, possibly with other children outside of school

- supporting your child to make friends with other groups of children. It may be necessary to try several different approaches before you and your child find an effective solution. Remind your child a solution may take some time and require determination.
- Practice: make sure your child knows it will take practice and time to change how they behave to change the situation.
- Courage: encourage your child to face up to the challenge, saying things like: If you don't try then you don't know what is possible.
- Be flexible: remind your child that it might be necessary to try a few different options to work out how to disarm this particular child's bullying behaviour.

- Celebrate: change might come gradually, so keep written records of progress and celebrate any small change you achieve.

- Teach your child self respect, assertiveness
- Let your child know it is okay to express anger appropriately
- Encourage Friendships
- Teach social skills (sharing, compromises, apologies, I messages, etc.)
- Encourage telling vs. tattling (explained on next slide)
- Don't advise ignoring or attacking the bully

The difference between 'Tattling and Telling' (between being a tattle-tale/gossip or reporting) is explained on the next slide

Tattling vs. Telling

Tattling purpose is to get someone in trouble can handle by self unimportant harmless topic behavior is accidental	vs. vs. vs. vs. vs.	Telling purpose is to keep people safe need help from an adult to solve important harmful or dangerous physically or psychologically behavior is purposeful
---	--	--

www.lrhartley.com/schoolbully

Synonyms for a tattler are tattletale, gossipper, rumormonger, gossipmonger, scandalmonger, tattletale, nosy parker, big mouth, pimp, and tattlebrat.

The purpose of tattling is to get someone in trouble, however the purpose of telling is to keep people safe.

The tattletale thinks, "I can handle this myself". The teller tells because of a recognised need to seek help from an adult to solve the concern.

Tattling is over unimportant matters, whereas telling is told because it is important.

Despite the intention to incur pain, tattling is usually over a harmless topic.

Telling is sharing concern over a harmful physically or psychologically dangerous topic.

Tattling often capitalises on sharing observed behavior that is accidental, whereas telling recounts purposeful behavior.

What can teachers do? (preventive)

- Provide students opportunity to talk about bullying and provide safe ways to report.
- Include classroom rules against bullying.
- Enlist their support in defining bullying as unacceptable for our school.
- Develop a classroom action plan to ensure that students know what to do when they observe a situation.
- Provide classroom activities and discussion about bullying.
- Focus on developing empathy and respect for others
- Work on friendship, assertive and mediation skills.

www.lrhartley.com/schoolbully

We will start with some preventative measures and then move onto an action plan.

Provide for your students opportunities to talk about bullying and provide safe ways for them to report.

Include in your classroom rules some specific rules against bullying.

Enlist their support in defining bullying as unacceptable for your school. This makes for a good discussion-starter.

Develop a classroom action plan to ensure that students know what to do when they observe a situation. See the handouts for a sample classroom action plan.

Provide classroom activities and discussion about bullying. There is a wealth of information online to help you with this.

Focus on developing empathy and respect for others. Model this yourself with your students by showing respect, listening to them and affirming them. Check my website for the free resource "One Hundred Tools For Teachers to Build Self Esteem in Children" in both audio and written formats.

Work on building your student's friendship, assertive and mediation skills.

What can teachers do? (action)

- Take immediate action when bullying is observed.
- Confront bullies in private.
- Use a discipline referral and note bullying behavior in the report.
- Notify parents of victims and bullies when a problem occurs.
- Refer both the victim and bullies for counseling.
- Provide protection for bullying victims. This may include a buddy system, extra supervision at noted area of concerns.
- Listen to parents who report bullying.
- Avoid using mediation due to imbalance of power.

www.lrhartley.com/schoolbully

Continuing our list of things that teachers can do - we looked at some preventative measures, so let's move onto our action plan.

It is important to take immediate action when bullying is observed. Delaying dealing with it is like a wearing tight shoes. They begin with a pinch, but if left unattended, they soon become painfully tender to the slightest touch.

Confront bullies in private.

Use a discipline referral (there is an example among your handouts) and note bullying behavior in the report.

Notify both the parents of victims and of bullies when a problem occurs.

Refer both the victim and bullies for counseling.

Provide protection for bullying victims. This may include a buddy system, extra supervision at noted area of concerns, more staff in attendance at recess, before and after school and during lunch breaks.

Listen to parents who report bullying and either follow through yourself or if the school has follow-through protocols make sure these are activated.

Avoid using mediation yourself due to the imbalance of power.

Normal Conflict VS. Bullying

Under normal conflict, it is between friends and there is equal power.

With bullying, there is imbalance of power between people who are not friends.

Normal conflict happens occasionally; bullying has repeated negative actions.

Normal conflict accidental and may not be very serious, however bullying is purposeful, serious, and the threat of physical emotional or psychological harm or hurt.

Normal conflict has an equal emotional reaction; bullying has an emotional reactance on part of the victim.

Normal conflict is not normally over seeking power or attention.

Bullying is all about seeking power, supremacy, influence and control.

Normal Conflict is not trying to get something; bullying is about gaining material things or power

Normal conflict is often followed by remorse and taking responsibility. The bully has no remorse and blames the victim.

Normal conflict involves an effort to solve the problem; with bullying the bully makes no effort to solve problem - Denial: "What problem?"

Activities for Talking About Bullying

ACTIVITY 1

WHAT IS BULLYING?

Children who understand what bullying is and the different forms it takes are better able to recognize bullying when they see it or when they become involved in it.

Children who understand that bullying hurts and why it's not permitted are more likely to respond appropriately and ask for help in bullying situations.

Resource: Eyes on Bullying Toolkit, p. 9

Use the What Is Bullying? chart (see previous page) to help children understand the definition of bullying and the different forms it can take. Help children understand the three characteristics of bullying:

- » It's on purpose.
- » It happens over and over again.
- » It involves the abuse of power to hurt others.

Help children understand the different ways that bullying can happen:

- Verbal: Using words to hurt (e.g., name calling, taunting, threatening)
- Physical: Using actions to hurt (e.g., hitting, kicking, pushing)
- Relational: Using friendships to hurt (e.g., excluding people, spreading rumors, saying someone can't be your friend, turning someone's friends against that person)

Relational bullying may be a new concept for children. Talk to children about how telling a classmate that he or she can't play or telling other children not to play with you is a form of bullying when it's done intentionally and repeatedly to hurt someone.

It's important to clarify that children don't need to include everyone in their play and activities every single time. There may be instances when it's really not a good time for someone else to join them. Practice how to say no, kindly and sensitively. For example, they could say, "Sorry, we're right in the middle, but we're almost done—you can play with us as soon as we finish this."

Young children may overgeneralize the concept of bullying by applying it to all forms of aggression, conflicts, and unpleasant behaviors.

Make sure children know that even if it's not bullying, hurting others by using words, actions, or relationships is not okay and needs to stop.

ACTIVITY 2 STORY SWAP

Children may be reluctant to talk about bullying for a number of reasons, for example:

- » They don't have the words and concepts to describe it.
- » They think it isn't important.
- » They are afraid, embarrassed, or ashamed.
- » They think that no one will care or be able to help.

Story Swap can give them some helpful language, validate their experiences, reassure them, and direct them toward help.

Start by sharing a story about when you were bullied or witnessed bullying. Hearing a story about an adult's bullying experiences may move a child to reveal his or her own experiences.

Ask the children to share some stories about bullying that happened outside the classroom—something that did not involve their own classmates. Ask them not to use real names.

Acknowledge that it's okay to talk about bullying because it affects everyone, whether we were the bully, whether the bullying happened to us, or whether we watched it happen. Discuss how the stories made them feel—to tell and to hear. Tell children that bullying is always wrong, and it should not happen. Using the stories as examples, help children brainstorm suggestions for what can be done to stop bullying.

ACTIVITY 3 TEASING OR TAUNTING?

Playful teasing among friends is okay, but teasing that hurts is called taunting—and if it's repeatedly used to hurt a targeted child, it is a form of bullying.

To help children understand the difference between teasing and taunting, talk with them about how nicknames can sometimes be fun and sometimes be used to hurt and bully someone. Present the following examples (or come up with your own) and have the children decide whether each nickname is playful teasing or hurtful taunting:

- » Scott runs very fast, so the kids call him “Rocket Scott.”
- » Jeremy is always last in a race, so the kids call him “Snaily Jerry” or “Slow Poke.”
- » Steve is small and cries a lot, so the kids call him “Baby Stevie.”
- » Maria is strong, so the kids call her “Wonder Girl.”
- » Natalia is smart, so the kids call her “Smarty Pants.”
- » Madeline is the biggest kid in the class, so the kids call her “Big Bad Mad.”

When discussing each nickname, ask the children:

- How can you tell whether a name is playful or hurtful?
- What is the intent of the name-caller? (Is the name-caller trying to be nice or mean? What if the name-caller hurt the child’s feelings but didn’t intend to be mean?)
- How do you think the child with the nickname feels?

Conclude the activity by asking the children for ideas about how to make sure they don’t call classmates hurtful names.

ACTIVITY 4 ON PURPOSE?

This activity helps children understand the difference between making a mistake and hurting someone “on purpose.” We all make mistakes—adults and children alike. We bump into someone by accident, for example, or leave our backpacks where someone could trip. But sometimes people do things that are intended to hurt others—things that are done “on purpose” and not by accident. Bullying is an example of an “on purpose” action because it involves intention: A child who bullies is intentionally trying to hurt someone.

Present the following examples (or come up with your own) and ask children to decide if it's a mistake or if it was done on purpose:

- » Jake steps on Ray's toe by accident and says, "I'm sorry."
- » Tony is mad at Robert and stomps hard on his toe.
- » Tanya doesn't see Eddie's tower of blocks and knocks it over.
- » Christine doesn't like Jane, so she scribbles all over her picture.
- » Marco drops his backpack in the hallway and runs out to play. When Anne runs outside to join Marco, she trips over his backpack.

When discussing each example, ask the children:

- How can you tell whether something is done by accident or on purpose?
- Is the person trying to be nice or mean?
- How do you think the other person in the story feels?

Conclude the activity by reminding children that all of our actions, whether we do them by accident or on purpose, can have an effect on others.

"YOU CAN'T SAY YOU CAN'T PLAY"

Talk with the group about how every child deserves to be treated with respect and included in activities. Discuss why the saying "You can't say you can't play" (a concept developed by Vivian Gussin Paley)³ is important and helps everyone feel included. Explain that sometimes children engage in relational bullying—intentionally and repeatedly excluding certain children from their play groups—and this behavior is unacceptable.

³ Paley, V. G. (1993). You can't say you can't play. Cambridge, MA: Harvard University Press.

Have the children brainstorm ways they might respond when someone tells them they can't play or tells others not to let them play. If the children get stuck, you might suggest the following responses:

- Ask if you can play in a little while.
- Say that you will feel sad or angry if you can't play.
- Get other children or an adult to help.

Have the children role-play different scenarios. With an adult playing the child who says, "You can't play with us," have the children practice using the responses they brainstormed.

Then have the children brainstorm and practice things that someone watching the bullying—a bystander—could say or do to help a child who is being excluded. Do the role-playing again, this time focusing on the bystander's response.

Conclude by explaining that children don't need to include everyone in their play and activities every single time. However, they do need to be friendly and courteous to all their classmates; for the most part, the whole class should be included in play groups and activities.

STORY TIME

Reading books out loud to children about bullying provides opportunities to talk about how other children experience and respond to bullying, and how they themselves might respond in similar situations. Here are some questions to get children started talking about a story that involves bullying:

- » What was the story about?
- » Who was doing the bullying?
- » Who was getting bullied?
- » Who was watching the bullying?

WHAT YOU CAN DO » Talk About Bullying

- » How did the bullying stop?
- » What else could any character have done to help?
- » What would you have done?
- » Have you ever been in a similar situation?
- » How did you feel? What did you do? What helped or didn't help?

Bullying

Summary

- Let your child know that bullying is wrong. Take your child's fears and feelings seriously, and help work out ways of dealing with them.
 - Reassure your child that being bullied is not their fault and that something can and will be done about it.
 - Let your child know that bullying happens to lots of children.
 - Protect your child by involving the school or club, or those in charge of wherever the bullying is happening.
 - Help your child to feel good about the other things in his or her life.

Bullying is ongoing physical, emotional or verbal aggression by one or more people against others. It is widespread and commonly found where children gather. It can have detrimental effects on all involved, including the bully.

Schools, early childhood services and sporting or interest groups have a responsibility to ensure a safe environment and should have policies to prevent bullying. Parents can help by believing and supporting their child. This includes helping your child to develop coping techniques and speaking to those in authority where the bullying is occurring.

Bullying is more than just physical aggression

Bullying is the deliberate desire by one or more people to hurt, threaten or frighten someone with words, behaviour or actions. Bullying can vary in its severity. It can include threatening, teasing, name calling, excluding, preventing others from going where they want to or doing what they want to, pushing or hitting, and all forms of physical abuse.

Bullying affects everyone involved

It is now recognised that long-term bullying can be very damaging for all involved. There are three groups involved in bullying who are affected:

- The child being bullied – who may experience effects on their health and wellbeing, including their sense of self and place in their world.
- The bully – who needs to learn more appropriate ways of interaction and peaceful problem solving.
- The audience – who witness bullying.

We are now learning the power of the audience. They are the ones who can stop the bullying from occurring by telling responsible adults what is going on. It is important that all children recognise that bullying is not acceptable, even if they are not involved, and that they can make a difference to help prevent bullying from occurring.

Victims of bullying

The bully can pick on anyone around them. Sometimes, though, they will choose children who seem easy to hurt and who they can successfully intimidate. They may pick on children who:

- Look or are different in some way
 - Are loners
 - Are stressed, either at home or at school
 - Have a disability
 - Struggle with schoolwork or other tasks set for the group
 - Are not good at sport
 - Lack social confidence
 - Are anxious

- Prefer books to people
- Are academic
- Are unable to hold their own because they are smaller, weaker or younger.

Occasionally, children provoke other children to bully. Very competitive environments can contribute to bullying.

Adults may not be the first to know

Children who are being bullied may not always tell adults first. They usually tell a friend or sibling before they will confide in other family members. Most children will not tell those in authority at the place where the bullying is occurring. They may be afraid or ashamed, or they may not have any confidence that those in authority can do anything about the bullying.

Look out for signs and effects

Some signs of a child being bullied may include the child:

- Not wanting to go to the place where they are being bullied and finding excuses to stay at home (for example, feeling sick)
- Wanting to travel a different way, rather than the most obvious or quickest way, to avoid the children who are bullying them
- Being very tense, tearful and unhappy after attending the place where they are being bullied
- Talking about hating the place where they are being bullied or not having any friends
- Being covered in bruises or scratches
- Wearing torn clothes and not being able to explain how this happened
- Going without lunch as lunch or lunch money has gone missing
- Refusing to tell you what happens at the place where they are being bullied
- Changing in behaviour and demeanour
- Gaining or losing weight
- Suffering from an eroding confidence
- Producing varied academic achievements, with poor results in a particular area where previously these were much better.

Your child may show other signs such as unhappiness, being teary or withdrawn, or changes in behaviour. These may include problems with sleeping, bedwetting and general regression. These signs may not necessarily mean your child is being bullied, but you need to check out what is worrying your child. You can do this by spending time encouraging your child to talk to you about their worries. This means listening (without interrupting) and believing your child.

Parents can help

There are several things parents can do to help. These include:

- Listen to your child and take their feelings and fears seriously.
- Try not to take everything into your own hands (depending on the age of the child), as this is likely to make your child feel even less in control.
- Help your child to work out their own non-violent ideas and strategies for coping with the problem as a first step.
- It is not helpful to call your child names (such as 'weak' or 'a sook') and don't allow anyone else do so.
- If the bullying involves verbal teasing, you may be able to help your child to learn to ignore it. Practise at home ways to help your child gain confidence (for example, walking past with their head up).
- Help your child think of ways to avoid the situation (for example, by going home a different way or staying with a supportive group).
- Some children are helped by imagining a special wall around them, which protects them so that the hard words bounce off.
- Work on building your child's confidence in things they do well.

- Be very careful that your child does not feel that being bullied is their fault.
- Encourage your child to have different groups of friends and be involved in different activities so they can see clearly where the bullying is occurring and where it is not. This helps children know where they can feel safe and to know it is not their fault.

At the place where the bullying is occurring

Talk to those in authority about the bullying. All schools, early childhood services and sporting or interest groups should have policies that deal with bullying. Some suggestions include:

- Make a list of the things that have happened to your child. Be clear and firm about their suffering. Be prepared to name the children who bully. If bullying persists, write down 'who', 'what', 'where' and 'when'.
- Talk to those in authority about how they deal with bullying – what steps they take to prevent bullying occurring and how they protect children.
- Talk to the appropriate person about what can be done to help your child. Keep in contact until the problem is sorted out.
- If you find it difficult to go to the authorities to talk about this, take a friend with you.

It is important for your child's ongoing wellbeing to get professional support if bullying is an ongoing problem for your child, or if it happens to your child in a lot of different situations and with different children.

Why children bully

Although the research is not entirely clear, it is generally recognised that bullies engage in this behaviour because it enables them to feel important. They may need to have control over something (or someone) to compensate for other areas in their lives where they feel alone or outcast, or they may be being bullied themselves. Bullies learn this behaviour from their environment. Bullies also suffer in the long term through poor academic achievements, poor social skills and poor adult relationships. Without support and guidance to change their bullying behaviour, the child bully can take this behaviour into adulthood.

If your child is the bully

If your child is bullying others, it is worth looking at the home environment and reflecting on a few questions:

- How is discipline handled with your child?
- What problem-solving skills are your children exposed to? How is conflict handled?
- Is your child exposed to helpful ways to communicate with other people?
- Is there unhappiness, arguing, relationship problems, conflict, fighting or violence at home that the child might be witnessing? Do they somehow think they are to blame?
- Is your child worried or frightened about something?
- What inappropriate, perhaps violent, interactions is your child exposed to through the media?
